HEARING ON CLAIM OF SOCIALISTS TO LEGISLATIVE SEATS

federal district attorney and a former Speaker of New York Assembly to Name Judiciary Committee -Legislation Is Talked of to Bar the Party From Office

ALBANY, New York-It is expected that the trial of the five suspended Socialist Assemblymen on charges tain indictments against the packers. that their political beliefs are such as to debar them from the Legislature will begin on next Wednesday. The judiciary committee which will conduct the hearing will be appointed on Monday night by Thaddeus C. Sweet, Speaker of the Assembly. Counsel for the committee will be Charles D. Newton, State's Attorney-General, who is also chief counsel for the Lusk committee. Morris Hillquit probably will be chief counsel for the Socialists. Possible legislation disqualifying Socialists from holding public office in this State, and preventing a political party holding Socialist Party tenets from participating in elections, is being discussed. Speaker Sweet says the Assembly should decide now whether it intends to have in its membership men who are "camouflaging their revolutionary ideas by saying that they are for evolution.' Senator Clayton R. Lusk, chairman of the Lusk committee, says that if sufficient evidence is produced to sustain the charge that the Socialists are planning to overthrow the government by force and violence "no loyal men will contend that they should be permitted to sit" in the Assembly. But it it appears by the evidence that they are not pledged to the overthrow of the government by force and violence, Minister of Transport—Report to be accomplished by the ballot, legal-

That resolution, the committee charges, "is intended to convict the Socialist Party of advocating the use of violence to overthrow the government, implying that the violence accompanying he revolution in Russia is desired and favored by us here."

Peaceful Policy Reaffirmed

"As recently as last August our party emphatically reaffirmed its policy of education, organization and .16 peaceful appeal to the suffrage of the voters," the statement continues, in

"It is remarkable that the Legislature waited until January, 1920, before taking the action it has. Men's—Women's—Children's

The great majority were not touched by fire or water and haven't any injuries that would indicate that they had been through a fire. In most cases neither the looks nor wearing qualities are affected in any way. They are of fine, high-grade leathers all latest styles, made by some of the most reliable manufacturers and are the kind of shoes that will give general satisfaction, else we would not have bought them to offer our customers.

BRITISH VIEW OF

to Be an Impossibility

Special to. The Christian Science Monitor of Trade Unions, has issued a report problems." of his recent visit to America with Washington.

Mr. Appleton writes that two impressions formed before leaving England were confirmed, namely, that the time for the conference was inopportune, and that nations which had fought for the right of self-determination in politics would demand the same right in respect of industrial matters and in social economics.

mestic difficulties," says the report, "may account for the attitude generfeared that Britain now sought to secure industrial advantages by precipating an international industrial convention which might conceivably reflect upon American methods or handicap American progress.

"It is possible," the report continues, 'that a plebiscite would give a big majority for an immediate ratification of the Peace Treaty and the covenant of the League of Nations, even though it included the Labor clauses. Americans are conscious of strength, and feel able to get even with any situation, but many would vote for ratification only on account of the world's sorry plight. Their reservations, inof being made in the Senate, would be made in their hearts, and an undercurrent of dissatisfaction would probably remain and continue for pate national advantage from the conference. They believe in their ability to make their industrial conditions better than anything outlined by the promised. eyes, and they are fully aware of the official propositions and to speak in favor of variations which may appeal to groups of supporters in their several countries.

"Will the nations accept the findings of the conference? Will it be possible to impose international uniformity in industrial affairs? Boys Need Quality Clothes

Father knows it—so does mother.

And in these days of fabric uncertainty, quality often becomes an elusive element.

A friend of the writer's remarked the other day: "I'm really at sea about clothing my boy. He's hard on clothes; and clothes cost a lot of money these days."

That sentiment is general. Conditions are such at present that good woolens are costly; but a thing that is good is worth its price, relatively.

This Store

-has two shops for boys: One is on the second floor of the old building, where the better grades of clothing are

The other is in the Down-Stairs Store, where the cheaper grades of boys' clothing are carried.

It is not always possible (nor always necessary) for everybody to buy the finer grades; but we recommend the finer grades because quality lives long after price is forgotten.

Our idea is to provide boys' clothing that we can guarantee, no matter what the price may be. That fact will be consoling to many parents, who, like my friend, are sailing on a sea of uncertainty.

Then it was that Capt. Detlef Schmude, an army officer, set to work to put into effect an idea which ocrred to him during the war, as he lay with his comrades near the Suez Canal. They determined not to return to the large cities, but that they would build their own small houses in the country. But on returning home, they found Germany poor and almost bankrupt so that the gov-ernment was unable to redeem Field Marshal von Hindenburg's pledge.

Need for Self-Help

Captain Schmude, who besides being a soldier is also a poet, there-upon declared: "If we have no coal, e must get it from somewhere. Let s, therefore, go into the mines and ring coal to the surface; if we have coal, we can burn bricks; and with bricks, we can build. The State places building plots at our disposal. We will build the houses ourselves and thereby save the high wages. If the working man has a home of his own, then the pleasure of workin will increase and he will also obtain better food if he cultivates veretables. er food if he cultivates vegetables nd corn of his own raising."

This plan resulted in stimulating he people in every way and in the esire to work, the output of coal is acreasing, and Germany's misery is ileviated. With the transmission of his idea to the potash mines, the out-out of such natural products as coal and potash will be raised. With the aid of coal and potash, industry and farming will be improved; additional men can be set to work, and the numer of unemployed and the cost of heir sustenance will be correspond-ngly decreased; Germany will again ingly decreased; Germany will again be able to export, and thus to pay its debts and in this way gradually peace and order will be restored. It is very evident that "Settlement through Work" will be the means of saving Germany from Bolshevism and definite breakdown.

Mr. Schmude, who was severely wounded in the war, did not hesitate to put his idea into practical use. He and 50 of his comrades set to work in a coal-mine. He worked for months as an ordinary miner. The miners originally received the former officer with distrust; but when they saw that he shrank from no class of work, they began to have confidence in him, and he soon persuaded them that his idea of "Settlement through Work" was a IN FOOCHOW CLAS sound one. The miners soon recog-nized that nobody was better able than this man to realize their supreme LONDON. England - "Patience" riginally opened at the old Opera Comique Theater, London, on April 23, 1881. On October 10, 1881, the entire company was transferred to the Savoy Theater, which had meanwhile been specially constructed with a view to these productions, and thenceforth became their home. The piece ran 578 nights. Since those days there have been two London revivals; one in 1900, and a second in 1907; but from e provinces Gilbert and Sullivan's orks are rarely absent for long.

In order to understand the droll satire on topical subjects that fills every page of the libretto, tempered with Sullivan's best and most tuneful airs, one must go back to the "æsthetic craze" that shed its gentle luster over the fashionable young ladies of the late seventies. True, it was but a assing phase, with its blue-and-white china, its lilies and languor, its terra cotta and sage green. But it invaded the nursery, as well as the drawing room, in the illustrated books for children of Walter Crane and Kate Greenaway, and its Pre-Raphaelite medievalism found expression in librty's art-fabrics, triumphing for a e over the heavy azures, vivid msons, and black-and-gold decoras of mid-Victorianism, in which Philistines still reveled prior to he age of white enamel.

In an interesting historical note acpanying the program, Mr. Max bohm writes that "perhaps æsneticism, as a social foible, would not ave outlasted 1880 if George du aurier had not so persistently and deftly satirized it, week by week, in e pages of Punch. . . . It is doubt-l whether any of the æsthetic young adies ever really called anything 'con-ummately utter' or used any other of those quaint catchwords which du rier, and after him Gilbert, attrib-

Maudle and Posselthwaite, the two orable æsthetes imagined for th, are evidently what suggested Gilbert the idea of Bunthorne and rosvenor. . . . Rossetti, who was still live when 'Patience' was produced, gined from the accounts of it in newspapers that Bunthorne was int for himself. Gilbert, it is beed, made a disclaimer. Nobody, ed, could have been less adapted k like Rossetti than George Groswho was cast for the part of rne. Also, there was no white k in Rossetti's hair, as there was whistler's, and as there was in the wig worn by Grossmith. And Rossetti not young like Bunthorne, and not, like the young Oscar Wilde, walked down Piccadilly with a poppy r a lily' in his hand. As nobody sup-osed Bunthorne to be meant for histler or even for Oscar Wilde, why ould Rossetti have supposed him to

It would seem reasonable to suppose, however, that but for these esthetes and their eccentricities "Patience" would never have been written; and, without its thrust at insincerity and its touch of journalism, might not have held its own so long, and established its claims as a classic.

There is not a great deal to be told of the actual story, for plot there is none. How Reginald Bunthorne, clad n amber plush, is wooed and followed by the 20 devoted maidens of high resthetic cult, headed by Lady Jane, till he finds that not poetry nor love, ut love of admiration is his predomnating passion, and, after temporaly falling an easy prey to her stalwart courtship, resigns himself to a ily and a single life; how Archibald Prosvenor, his rival, an "idyllic poet," arrayed in green velvet, discards the fiers of the same 20 young hearts, lus poetry and plush, for the loudest of check suits and the simple little dairymaid. Patience, the sweetheart of his childhood; and how the dashing Dragoons, headed by the Colonel, e Major and the subaltern Duke, eed at last in winning back the ffections of the aforesaid "damozels," the gladly exchange their trailing greenery-yallery" draperies for the fashionably pinched waists and bus-tles of the early eighties—these are he main facts of the story.

In the recent production, both Mr. Henry Lytton, in the part of Bun-thorne, and Mr. Leo Sheffield, as Arhibald Grosvenor, a part associated with the name of Rutland Barrington, layed to perfection and sang each ine with humor and clear-cut enunci-tion. Colonel Calverley, formerly the part of Richard Temple, was in the capable hands of Mr. Sydney Granville; whilst Miss Sylvia Cecil as Patience, and Miss Nellie Briercliffe as Lady Angela were charming from both the musical and theatrical point of view. Miss Bertha Lewis made a great deal of the part of Lady Jane,

Many items were encored. The chorus of Dragoons, the "Magnet and the Churn," the sextet and chorus, "I hear the soft note of the echoing e," and the inimitably witty duet f Bunthorne and Grosvenor telling fairly brought down the house. The dresses, in all cases, were most cleverly conceived and designed by Mr. Hugo Rumbold; the Pre-Raphaelite models worn by the lackadaisical ladies' chorus being thoroughly characteristic, and the bright touch of scarlet of the Dragoons taking one back to days before khaki was inwented. Imagine our surprise, then, when plexing question of the exact relation was nothing of the horn about this we heard a bold man actually arguing with one of the meekest but most decisive salesmen in the lot. I heard him first, for the artist just then was drawing the back of the gentleman who had the newspaper in his hand. The salesman was saying something about this new way being the best way you could do it on any car, and everybody said so who had tried it: and the man was insisting that he'd far rather do it with a clutch, and he didn't care who liked the new way, he would do it with a clutch, because

And then there is the further charm with Mr. Kipling, that this same freshness is such a very strange affair of its kind-so mixed and various and rushes about, making people jump with the deep sounds, and sportive exaggerations of tone, that issue from its painted lips. He has this mark of a vocation, that different spectators may like him-must like him, I should almost say-for different things: and this refinement of attraction, that to those who reflect even upon their pleasures he has as much to say as to those who never reflect upon anything. Indeed, there is a certain amount of room for surprise in the fact, that being so much the sort of figure that the hardened critic likes to meet, he should also be the sort of figure that inspires the multitude with confidence -for a complicated air is, in general, the last thing that does this." "Mr. Kipling has the character that furnishes plenty of play and of vicarious experience - that makes any perceptive reader expect a rare luxury. He has the great merit of being a compact and convenient illustration of the surest source of interest in a painter of life-that of having an identity as marked as a window frame. . . . His extreme youth is indeed what I may call his window bar-the support on which he somewhat rowdily leans while he looks down upon the human scene; just as his other conditions (to mention only some of them) are his prodigious facility, which is only less remarkable than his stiff selection; his unabashed temperament, his flexible talent, his familiar friendship with India-established so rapidly, and so delight in battle, his 'cheek' about as at first, and still more firmly. There everything; his determination not to be duped, his 'imperial' fiber, his love of the inside view, the private soldier and the primitive man. I must add to this list of attractions the remarkable way in which he makes us aware that he has been put up to the whole thing directly by observation, and not by the communications of others. These elements, and many more, constitute a singularly robust little literary character (our use of the diminutive is altogether a note of endearment and enjoyment) which, if it has the rattle of high spirits and is in no degree apologetic or shrinking, yet offers a very liberal pledge in the wa; of No leaflet even stirring in the breeze, good faith and immediate perform-

That this is a perfectly obvious rendering of the teaching of Jesus may be proved by a reference to his own words. In his famous interview with Nicodemus he pointed out to the Pharisee that "that which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit," thus drawing an absoreality and the counterfeit of matter; whilst, a little later, he told his disciples, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." Nevertheless although Jesus declared that the flesh profited nothing, he healed the sick and raised the dead, and this surely because he realized that a healthy unhealthy one, just as physical life was nearer Truth than the appearance of death, and that the very first step towards the obtaining of the Mind of Christ was an understanding of Truth know the truth," he said, "and the truth shall make you free,"-free from the supposititious law of sin, disease, and death. It is perfectly clear, then, that Jesus Where the shy-eyed delicate deer saw, and that Jesus taught, that obedience to material law was the first step towards a man's ability to demonstrate the nothingness of material law through an understanding of the law of God. Disobedience to material law, without an understanding of spiritual law, sufficient to demonstrate the omnipotence of that spiritual law, could commonly end in nothing but disaster. A man, for instance, who subjects himself to conditions which physical law

DEMOSTHENES, endeavoring to find a phrase which hould exemplify the dignity of the legal code, declared that every law was the invention and gift of the gods. What, of course, he was endeavoring to bring out was that behind the efforts of men for the protection of order and for the administration of justice, there was the authority and power of all the spiritual forces known to the Greek religion. And, indeed, this has been the view of the great thinkers throughout the ages. The founder of the Christian religion himself declared, speaking of the law and the prophets, themselves the very essence of the Hebrew religion, I am not come to destroy

Like every other human undertaking, it is scarcely necessary to say that the administration of the law has so often been perverted and polluted that the great judges throughout history have stood out as the protectors of mankind against the whims of autocracy and the passions of unbalanced judgment. At the same time, between what is termed the law and what is known as law, there is a vast difference. The law represents the efforts of men, acting under the pressure of right and occasionally even of wrong, to buttress and to protect that sense of right or wrong: Whereas law represents the supposititiously invariable action of what is known as nature in natural science. It is the law which condemns the criminal and protects the honest man, just as it is law which orders the seasons, so that the writer of Job could demand, "Canst thou bring forth Mazzaroth in his season? Or canst thou guide Arcturus with his sons?"

All this is to be remembered in any attempt to estimate the consequences of legislation upon politics, upon, that is to say, the liberties of men. If a superficial idea of law is formed by a legislature, the acts of that legislature are bound to be themselves superficial and possibly langerous. But if a true concept of law is formed, if the legislators of a state gain some sense of what was in the mind of the pagan Demosthenes and what was behind the words of the founder of Christianity, then their legislative acts must be stirred by a perception of Principle which, even though seen in a glass darkly, must inspire them with a greater ambition to place upon the tatute books only laws which may be interpreted upon the bench in the interests of mankind. For this reason the responsibility of the judge is second only to that of the legislature. It was no less a judge than Lord Bacon himself who wrote, "A judge ought to prepare his way to a just sentence, as God useth to prepare His way, by raising valleys and taking down hills.

To every age its own problems seem the mountains, against which the problems of other ages appear to be molehills. This is partly because the cause and effect of bygone struggles reflect, to the student, the inevitable, in that wisdom which is wise after the event. But it is also because of the want of perspective in the human mind, which takes the foothills for the mountains, and s then overwhelmed when, the foothills having been climbed, the real mountain chain is revealed beyond them. from the slopes of the foothills the real mountains may be invisible. It is only as the human pygmy withdraws, that the chain in its immensity is revealed by the perpective. That is why it has always proved impossible to judge character or events with historical perspective during the days when the events are transiring, and the characters are engaged in action. Even, however, after having stated this as a warning, it is possible to see that the events of the great war were not ordinary events, and that the aftermath of the great war is not an ordinary aftermath. In the old days armies came and armies went, fighting for a king's ransom, for a province, or for the sake of some human passion. What men have come to call Armageddon was not one of these struggles. Armageddon was an acute outburst of that incessant conflict between right and wrong which has come about at varying intervals in the history of the world, and of which by far the greatest example took place once, in the month of Nisan, when Pilate was procurator of Judea, in the name of the Emperor Tiberius.

The aftermath of the great war is bound, then, to be filled with incidents of tremendous interest and of tremendous consequences to humanity. One of these is the meaning of the League of Nations, another is the influence of prohibition on the race. But perhaps most important of all is the dealing of man with man, in the markets of the world, and in the labor market in particular, for it is here that the passions of humanity clash with a violence second only to the passions roused by religion. For this reason it is of the utmost importance' that every law which is placed upon the statute book should be framed with the highest sense of rightcousness, and executed with the highest sense of justice. The statute book of a nation is, as it were, the expression of its national conscience, as the courts of a nation are the expression of its sense of equity.

In dealing, then, with the passions, no matter of what order, which have been roused by the war, the utmost effort should be made, on every side, to display the great virtue of self-restraint, so that men be not hurried into acts which will not stand in the light of Principle, or petrayed into words which will not bear the examination of Truth. In every legislature in the world men are facing today the problem of making laws under which mankind is to be governed in the immediate future. Take a single instance of this, from the Senate of the United States. A bill has been introduced, so compreensive in its character that it would place the fate of a free press in the hands of an individual. But if, any gle fact has been brought out by the war, it is surely he danger of placing overwhelming power in the hands ! of an individual, or, worse still, of an oligarchy. As the student of history looks back across the ages, he sees that the oligarchy has commonly armed itself with scorpions where the autocrat has been satisfied with whips. Therefore, to place in the hands of an individual the fate of an institution such as the free press, for which the free peoples have battled and struggled throughout some three centuries, is to admit a political bankruptcy which is almost unthinkable,

And yet, this question of a free press is only one, and not even the most important or far-reaching of the questions which the new era will be called upon to settle. On the settlement of these questions in accordance with the law of divine Principle, the immediate future of mankind will rest. And there is a sentence in the law and the prophets, whose words the founder of Christianity declared he came not to destroy but to fulfill, which may be recommended for the guidance, not only of legislators but of every thinking human being, and it is this, "And what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?

Labor in Spain

LABOR in Spain is improving its condition. It is doing it, very often, in a truly Spanish fashion, but there can be no doubt that, within the last few years, and especially within the last few months, very real progress .has been made. For this the tremendous economic changes brought about by the war have been mainly responsible. The Spanish laborer is easily aroused. He will embark upon a strike at the shortest possible notice, and with the utmost possible enthusiasm. He will participate in the inaugural celebrations of a new Labor movement with tremendous eagerness, and he will fervently agree that such a movement must of necessity be the means of ushering in the millennium. His ardor, however, quickly cools. He loves to cut the first sod of anything, but he finds the spade-work terribly trying. And so, after the first impulsive attempt to improve his condition, he has, in a vast number of cases, quickly relapsed into his previous acceptance of things as they

Such was, at any rate, the case until comparatively recently. The war, however, made itself felt in Spain, as in every other country. The demand for production increased tremendously with every year of the great struggle, whilst, at the same time, the cost of living went up by leaps and bounds. On all hands the workman found himself jerked most unceremoniously out of his rut, and forced, whether he liked it or not, to take stock of his position, and to go on taking stock of it. The effect has been remarkable. Men of an entirely new class have made their appearance as Labor leaders. They are not politicians first and Labor leaders a long way afterwards, as was formerly the case almost invariably. They are men who place the interest of Labor in the very forefront of their effort, are strongly opposed to the petty political intriguing, so dear to the average Spaniard acting in any public capacity, and they are determined to bring Spain into line with the rest of western Europe, as far as the status of Labor is concerned.

They are, moreover, men who are workers themselves, men who have come straight from the pit or factory, and who know exactly what steps should be taken in order to instruct the rank and file in those elements of organization, ignorance of which has hitherto stood so much'in the way of really effective work. During the past two or three years, these men have been carrying on a remarkable propaganda of education amongst the working men and women. Instead of applying themselves to mere agitation, they have sought to enable the workman to take an intelligent interest in the larger Labor issues, and, by understanding the why and the wherefore of things, to gain that staying power which, until recently, was so conspicuous by its absence. And they have measurably succeeded. Already great changes for the better have taken place. Spain, wonderful to relate, leads the world in the enactment of a nation-wide eight-hour day, and, more wonderful still, is enforcing it; whilst in the matter of such things as higher wages and better working conditions much has been accomplished. All this has, to a large extent, been rendered possible because the new Labor leaders grasped the simple fact, generally so woefully disregarded in Spain, that nothing can be done without education.

Teachers and Tax Reforms

Quite naturally, the chief objectors to the proposals, frequently made of late, to increase the salaries of public school-teachers, have been those who seek to avoid the payment of increased taxes. As is well known, under the public school system of the United States, the sole revenue for the support of the schools is derived from taxes imposed upon real and personal property, inheritances, and, in some states, from the collection of fines and forfeitures. But the chief source of revenue, probably, is from taxes assessed upon real estate and personal property. It has never been consistently maintained, at least within recent years, that the compensation paid to public school-teachers has been adequate to living conditions. From time to time, within the last year or more, the attention of the public has been called to the fact that failure to deal with the situation has resulted, as every one should have known it would result, in wholesale desertion of the teaching/profession, even by those who have fitted themselves, by years of experience and training, to follow teaching as a life work. There have, of course, been sporadic, localized efforts to correct a condition generally admitted to be economically wrong, on it appearing that the time of emergency might pass before the machinery of state or nation could be set in motion to provide relief. But there seems no immediate prospect that those economic conditions which, for a while, were supposed to be due to sudden war-time emergencies are to be succeeded by the economic conditions expected in peace. Living costs in all sections of the United States are still increasing, and the wage scale in the industries is, perforce, maintained at wartime standards. In its relation to the teachers in the public schools, therefore, what may have been regarded as a local problem has become a national or a state problem, to be dealt with, it would appear, by applying comprehensive remedies.

The Illinois State Teachers Association, at a recent meeting, approached the question of teachers' compensation from, as it were, a new angle. Assuming the problem to be fundamental, this association proposes to apply a fundamental remedy. In its deliberations the membership of the association evidently accepted as proved the premise that the present scale of salaries paid to teachers in the public school is too low. This is admitted, it is safe to assert, even by those who have sought to prevent higher tax levies in order that the scale might be raised. The Illinois teachers, therefore, instead of urging the enactment of laws providing for a higher tax rate, propose, by going to the very bottom of the matter, to bring about the adoption of a state constitutional amendment which shall assure the equal taxation of all property of a given class. In the resolutions adopted by the association, the indirect charge is made that, under the existing state laws, property legally taxable escapes its just burden, and that the schools are therefore deprived of revenues rightfully belonging to them. It is insisted, quite properly it would seem, that natural resources, regarded as the sources of wealth, should be made to contribute a fair proportion of the revenues necessary for public purposes, and that the unearned increment of land values, made productive by Labor and the power of the whole community, should be taken in taxes to support community institutions. The idea, apparently, is that socially created increases in the value of natural resources should be deprived of the possibility of being held out of use in the hope of gain through speculation.

Figures frequently cited within the last few months, in the reports of the United States Treasury, leave no room for doubt that Capitalism, so-called, is abundantly able, under the present apparently stabilized economic and industrial conditions, to bear its just proportion of the necessary public burden. The increase accruing to certain lines of capital, according to official figures, has been as high as 33,000 per cent, a gain for a single year which is almost unbelievable. To these vast profits the school-teachers no doubt have contributed their share. They have reason now for demanding at least a portion of it back. It can be returned to them legally only through the channels provided by the equitable assessment and collection of taxes, and the method proposed by the Illinois teachers seems to be worthy of serious consideration.

On Lobbying

THE persuasive art of lobbying, as practiced in the United States, anybody may study, in the rough as it were, by visiting a legislative session in one of the smaller western commonwealths. There the whole law-making and governing process, as seen on a small scale, is fascinating in its naïvety. Especially engaging, however, is the activity by which the various guileless legislators are apprised of the urgent desires of their constituents. It is a work that anyone may carry on. Where there are but few honorable senators and assemblymen, perhaps fifty altogether, and almost as few constituents, the association is not at all difficult. One simply arrives at the capital city, or rather village, in the morning, walks up the broad, empty street to the Capitol, presents oneself at the door of, say, the Assembly, and is promptly invited by the young automobile salesman, who was so elected from one's own county and who looks upon almost anyone in these days as a prospective customer, to take a comfortable armchair beside his desk on the floor of the House.

Of course, the mere sitting beside an Assemblyman does not constitute lobbying. At the moment Mr. Speaker, who, having possibly presided over a barber's chair with all the authority of clippers and razor, feels perfectly at home in his present supremacy, is ruling on a weighty point of parliamentary procedure. Thus there may be no opportunity just now to do more than indicate to one's gracious young host the most objectionable features in this bill, which provides for the gathering of various subtly complicated statistics. Just back of one's chair, however, is the desk of an energetic young clergyman, whose spare moments are taken up with acting as a bank cashier, running a typewriter agency, and serving as city clerk of his home town. Beside him sits the one lady in the Assembly, and behind her a youth still in his army uniform. So one's very presence here, on this morning when few are visiting the session, is in a way an introduction to the whole body of lawmakers.

As soon as the recess is taken for the morning, one is free to shake hands with those in the vicinity, and mention one's mission. And yet, those first few moments, when every legislator is eagerly signaling to some one on the opposite side of the room, may not be the best time for real lobbying. Possibly the real work can be done better in the evening, at the hotel, when senators and assemblymen alike have come down out of their cheerless little rooms to sit around the stove in the office. During the daytime, however, it is well also to appear before committees, buttonhole the tall rancher as he strolls out into the hall, and watch the methods of the first lieutenant, in his best uniform, whom the United States Public Health Service will keep on hand throughout the session. If a special delegation of prominent business men from some flourishing valley is present to urge the creation of a new county, the seriousness with which they take themselves, and the effect of their obvious importance on the whole legislative body, will be interesting to observe. Endlessly varied, indeed, are the combinations which present themselves to one's attention at such a scene of activity.

Pernicious as much of this intimate influencing of legislators has become, there must, after all, be the right way for a democracy to show its representatives just what it is thinking. Even honest men, serving perhaps for the first time in the Legislature, need to be kept awake to what the subtleties of vote-trading and fear of gubernatorial patronage may tend to bring about. Even a legislator can be shown the clear truth in any connection, until he readily and thoroughly takes his stand for it. What every Legislature needs is to be open to really intelligent reasoning, but proof against any sort of chicanery. This is the high ideal which must be attained through persistently alert endeavor. Only as every citizen sees to it that really representative men and women are elected, and kept informed as to the progress of genuine public understanding, can the education of legislators take the place of those kinds of lobbying that have been objectionable. No law-making body is entitled simply to have its own way. Though on its guard against wrong influences, it should be responsive to the right kind of advice.

Notes and Comments

THE appropriation of money by the municipal authorities of New York City to provide a protective coating of wax for the old Colonial architecture of the City Hall is a reminder that a similar thing was done, and proved successful, in the case of the Egyptian obelisk known as "Cleopatra's Needle," which stands in Central Park, New York. Time was crumbling the surface of the obelisk, and a preparation of wax, penetrating the stone about half an inch, weatherproofed the surface and stopped the deterioration. The same process will be applied to the Colonial marble of the City Hall, and the necessity of doing this only on the front of the building shows how little the builders anticipated the rapid growth of the city. Looking ahead, so to speak, it did not occur to them that the time would soon come when people would look behind; they built the front of the structure of marble, but thought brownstone good enough for the rear, and so later the brownstone had to be painted white to correspond with the marble front. Built in 1803, the city has since grown some fifteen miles beyond and be-

IT USED to be said that if only the Chinamen could be persuaded to add one inch to the length of their shirts, the cotton mills of England would double their profits, and one had visions of English commercial travelers touring China in a great endeavor to bring about this happy result. Now comes a much more ambitious proposal, that if all of China's 400,000,000 people could afford to buy only one more suit of cotton clothes a year, 100,000 additional looms would be needed to manufacture the required cloth. As China has only 7000 looms, such an extension of wardrobes would immediately benefit England, with its 1,000,000 looms which are now operating to clothe the world.

As MIGHT have been expected, the erection of a statue of Robert Burns in Boston gives occasion for again asking why this city has no statue of the American poet and author, Edgar Allan Poe. One does not question the propriety of a statue of Burns, there being a Burns Memorial Association public-spirited enough to raise it, says a Boston writer; but one does remark that a statue of Poe would be appropriate, and wonder why there is no Poe Memorial Association to attend to the matter. Poe, whose fame time has established, and whose influence abroad, with that of two or three other American writers, compelled respect for American literature at a time when such respect was certainly not spontaneously given, was a native of Boston, published his first book of poems in Boston, and put it out as the work of "a Bostonian." The explanation, very likely, is that Poe, either in his life or his writings, made no appeal to the warmer emotions that develop friendliness and inspire individuals to come together and form memorial asso-

THE old Adelphi, in London, has come into its own again. The Air Board have gone finally, and the old hotel is once more available to the public. The years of war will have made a hiatus in a record which contains many interesting pages. Built by the Adam Brothers, it was opened, in 1777, under the name "The Adelphi New Tavern and Coffee House," and described itself as 'fitted up in the most elegant and convenient manner for the entertainment of noblemen and gentlemen."

A HOPEFUL prediction in the domestic situation is made by an official of the Travelers Aid Society, who declares that the day of household help at a reasonable price, in the United States, is about to return; in fact, the premonitory hint of dawn is visible. Already, says this observer, hundreds of young women from Scandinavia, Ireland, England, and Italy are coming to America, the advance guard of a great exodus whose members will be glad to distribute themselves among those American households whose "overhead" does not permit of more than $7 or $8 for this department of domestic management. Broadly speaking, therefore, conditions may be much better for the would-be employer than before the war, although many a housekeeper will doubtless continue studying the art of "doing without."

What's in a name? becomes a matter for consideration in the case of the happy-go-lucky manner of bestowing one practiced by the surveying party about which Captain Reynardson tells in his book on the Mesopotamian campaign. This party came to a village on the Euphrates not marked on the map, so the surveyors hailed a local Arab and asked him: "What is the name of this village?" "M'adri," the Arab replied, m'adri meaning "I do not know." But the party unquestioningly accepted it as the name of the village, and M'adri the village is to this day—on the survey map.

ORLEANS is being penny-wise and pound-foolish. Her town hall has a magnificent belfry, and, because the cost of reparation would be high, she is simply, without compunction, pulling the belfry down. It overlooks the Place de la République, and is a veritable landmark, standing as it does at the cross-roads at the center of the town. Already the scaffolding hides from view the beautiful, dignified outline of the belfry tower, and it really seems that the people of Orleans are shortsighted enough to allow their city to be thus deprived of one of its chief claims to interest. Orleans will no longer attract the lover of, and searcher for every vestige of medievalism, if she ruthlessly pulls down her old houses, and that will mean much, with a season approaching when visitors are expected to reach a maximum figure.
